

Liania: The Player's Guide

David Starner

May 18, 2020

A thousand years ago, at the end of a world-shaking war, the artifacts of Chaos were buried in an ancient dungeon. Above this dungeon, a city was built, and in its walls magic was bound to prevent any from leaving the city or the dungeon below. For all the disturbances of the last millennium, the forces of Chaos have been relatively quiet; will your explorations keep them from erupting or accidentally unchain them?

Ancestries

There are many ancestries open to players: dwarves, elves, gnomes, goblins, halflings, orcs and humans (from Core Rulebook); leshy and lizardfolk (from Lost Omens Character Guide); shoony (from AP #153 / <https://2e.aonprd.com>); steelheart (from Ponyfinder: Second Edition Conversion Guide); various forms of beastfolk (from Ponyfinder: Untamed Lands); nedjes sphinxes (from Ponyfinder: Depths of Everglow); felsines (from Felsine); yroometjis (from Files for Everybody: Yroometjis); mogogols (from Amazing Ancestries: The Mogogol); oyapoks (from Cultures of Celmae: Oyapok 2e); and entobians (from Amazing Ancestries: The Entobian). (Ratfolk and high fey are works in progress.)

Humans, halflings, gnomes, goblins and ratfolk are common in Liania. Orcs, elves, dwarves, leshy, lizardfolk, shoony, steelheart, nedjes sphinxes, and mogogols are uncommon; everyone has seen them, but few know one personally. The rest are rare to the point of being unheard of; if no player plays one, it's possible they will be non-existent in town.

The elves, dwarves and orcs were around before the young races, or so they claim. It is true that they do not have gods and cannot gain power from the gods; there are no clerics or champions of these races. In contrast, the young races cannot cast primal or divine spells without connection to a god. Many elves and dwarves claim that the bringing of the gods also brought Chaos and the destruction that came with.

2.1 Common races

2.1.1 Humans

Humans come in a wide variety of forms, in a wide variety of cultures. The groups that came to Liania a thousand years ago have formed a genetically and culturally homogenous group, but newer additions are constantly arriving. They speak Common, though a dozen historical languages are still taught. They both have many of the lordships and make up the largest part of the slums.

For half-elves, see elves, and likewise for half-orcs. There is no crossbreeding of ancestries in the world of Liania.

2.2 Uncommon races

2.2.1 Elves

Half-elves are not descended from humans. Upon the coming of the young races, elves of the original lifespan and powers started becoming rarer; elvish children started more similar to humans and dying younger. Elves do throw around the phrase “half elf”, in Elvish, as an insult; there are technical terms in Elvish for it, but it is not discussed in polite company. They are just elves. This is not discussed in mixed company, so while other races can tell the difference visually, they don’t have a clear understand of what’s going on.

Elves speak Common Elvish (or just Elvish), as well as either Quenya or Sindarin. While closely related to each other and more distantly to Common Elvish, the language signifies a deep split in the Elvish community, and relationships across the barrier are rare. Newcomers to Liania, particularly those of rare heritages like Arctic Elves, may speak a different Elvish tongue in addition to Common Elvish; they will be pressured to pick a side.

2.2.2 Orcs

There are no rules for playing full orcs yet.

Half-orcs, like half-elves, are not descended from humans. The Orcish term for them would more literally be translated “adult cub”; as orcs do, it is less precisely used than Elvish “half-elf”, being applied to full orcs that are less powerful, and not to any “half-orc” who could pound the speaker into the ground for such an insult.

2.2.3 Dwarves

2.2.4 Steelheart

From Ponyfinder: Second Edition Conversion Guide; see the GM for more details.

The steelheart are a race of mechanical intelligent ponies, numbering about 450. They were created in town 300 years ago, and the entire race lives here. They do not reproduce, instead continuously repairing older individuals. Out of the original 600, 100 have gone missing, and 50 are non-functional and awaiting repairs. Steelheart with sufficient damage often lack their original memories after being repaired, but are still considered the same person. (In theory, this functions as a free raise dead for steelheart; in practice, it will take equivalent amount of funds to put a PC to the top of the queue. Some of the non-functional steelheart have been waiting repairs for decades.)

Their creator ascended shortly after their creation, and Fekoro is now a god worshipped virtually exclusively by the steelheart. Nobody has managed to create more living constructs like the steelheart, and the steelheart have not been willing to share any information they have with anyone else.
